Subject objectives	The aim of the course is primarily to introduce students to the "anthropology at home"/"anthropology of the contemporary": its subject of study, its specific critical perspective which addresses modern and postmodern societies, the topics it engages with, and the theoretical concepts it employs. The secondary goal is to stimulate anthropological imagination among students.

Learning outcomes	Course outcome	Subject outcome	Method of verification
	[SOCL3_U01] The graduate is able to interpret social phenomena using sociological concepts and sociological imagination	The student is capable of independently applying knowledge of the topics discussed in lectures to interpret other pressing phenomena of contemporary times. The student critically engages with media messages, political narratives, and common knowledge.	[SU4] test/exam - oral or written
	[SOCL3_U02] The graduate is able to use theoretical knowledge from different streams of sociology and acquire data to analyse specific social processes and phenomena	The student has the ability to analyze topics related to everyday life (including their own) using a theoretical analytical framework. The student understands that describing everyday experience is different from scientific analysis.	[SU4] test/exam - oral or written
	[SOCL3_W04] The graduate knows and understands in an advanced way the types of informal and formal social bonds that arise in different types of groups, social networks and societies, and with the regularities governing their change.	The student understands how global processes and phenomena such as migrations, late capitalism, or globalization influence the formation of social bonds within various groups and communities.	[SW4] test/exam - oral or written
	[SOCL3_W02] The graduate has advanced knowledge about different types of social structures and institutions such as the state, nation, classes and social strata, ethnic group, local community, social group, family, political party, enterprise, she/he knows the differences in the functioning principles of social, public and commercial organisations	The student knows how late modernity and late capitalism have redefined the ways people function within various social structures and institutions such as the state, nation, social classes, ethnic groups, local communities, families, and workplaces. The student knows the anthropological conceptual framework for describing these transformations.	[SW4] test/exam - oral or written
	[SOCL3_U08] The graduate is able to analyse current social phenomena in the context of knowledge about the mechanisms of human activity, the impact of a group on an individual and the processes of change that Polish society, European society and that of the world undergoes	The student can critically analyze specific issues in contemporary Poland and Europe (political transformation, nationalisms, migration processes, changes in labor relations) in contrast to popular knowledge and media narratives.	[SU4] test/exam - oral or written
	[SOCL3_W05] The graduate has advanced knowledge of man as a subject constituting social structures and the rules of their functioning, as well as acting in these structures and participating in cultural practices in the local, regional environment, the area of national culture and global exchange	The student possesses advanced, critical knowledge of selected important issues in the contemporary world and their anthropological interpretation.	[SW4] test/exam - oral or written
