Subject objectives	Regardless of the methodological strategies used and the preferred research methods, the idea of measurement is present in every research project. The course "Measurement and scaling methods in sociology" is to equip participants with the skills of selecting appropriate measurement tools for research purposes. The classes are to equip students with practical skills of selecting, building and calculating indexes, scales and, in the case of qualitative tools, typologies, categories. The topics also include issues related to modeling in sociological research.
