Subject contents	Subject conducted in the first semester of the first year of MSU (complementary Masters studies) in the field of applied linguistics. During the classes, skills related to writing and working with scientific texts in English (such as journal articles, chapters in an edited volume, monographs, conference abstracts, or a master's thesis) are improved. Both productive language skills (such as production of certain types of texts) and receptive language skills (understanding of the written text) are trained. The subject prepares students to use scientific texts on their own, as well as to cite them correctly and to refer to them in their own works. A person conducting classes in the subject makes a choice of detailed content in the given subject area.
Prerequisites and co-requisites	Knowledge of the English language at a level enabling the achievement of assumed educational results.
