Subject objectives	The overarching aim of the course is to introduce students to the history of English literature and culture (in outline) and to a representative group of classical literary texts produced in the British Isles from the sixth century to our own time, as well as to hone practical skills in the analysis and interpretation of literary works. An additional aim is to deepen the participants' historical, literary, cultural and linguistic awareness and to expand the range of English vocabulary at their disposal. An important part of the course is self-study: reading, interpreting and writing.
