Subject objectives	The lecture attempts to reconstruct and analyze the tensions and mutual relations between magic and religion in an anthropological, sociological, and historical context. The starting point is the question of the identity of man as a religious being (homo religiosus) and/or magical being (homo magicus), which leads to reflection on the boundaries, convergences, and functions of these two systems of meaning in different cultures and eras.

Example issues/ example questions/ tasks being completed	Can magic be considered a form of religion? Or is it the other way around religion is a legitimized form of magic? How do religious rituals differ from magical practices? Can they always be distinguished? Are magic and religion mutually exclusive or do they coexist within a single culture/religion? What is the difference between belief in miracles and magical practice? What function did magic play in traditional societies and does it still play in modern societies? Why was (and is) magic treated as a threat by institutional religions? Has science completely replaced magic, or does it coexist with it? What role do magic and religion play in constructing individual and collective identity? What mechanisms of religious and cultural exclusion are visible in relation to sorcerers, witches, magicians? How does contemporary popular culture redefine the concepts of religion and magic?
