Subject contents

The class is an introduction to issues related to the realization of art exhibitions, both in practical and theoretical terms. The emphasis of the class program is on practical curatorial activities, from creating initial concepts for exhibitions, conducting the necessary research, building exhibition scripts and programs of accompanying activities, as well as creating and managing collections. The theoretical knowledge of the various determinants of curatorial work has been profiled in terms of the aforementioned practical skills, and includes, among other things, familiarization with various models of curatorial strategies and a wide range of determinants of the work of a curator of exhibitions. The subjects of consideration will include past and present exhibitions of various types (including contemporary and ancient art), as well as the organization of exhibitions in various types of exhibition institutions, as well as the nature and policies of these institutions, discussed from a regional, national and international perspective. The course program also covers the issues of planning exhibitions and accompanying activities, collecting materials, cooperation with designers and artists, cooperation between different entities carrying out a joint exhibition project, creating plans and schedules for implementation, as well as issues of financing models and exhibition implementation. This provides an insight into the specifics of contemporary curatorial activity in a broad sense, including the problems associated with the dependence of the nature and size of exhibitions on the ability to
