Subject objectives	The aim of the course is to develop students' ability to critically analyze and interpret films that address the issue of audiovisual transgression in diverse cultural, social, and political contexts. The course focuses on a historical, comparative approach to the creation and reception of films, examining their sociopolitical contexts in relation to the relevance of the themes they address. The analysis takes a problem-oriented approach, focusing on selected central themes and their formal and thematic manifestations, rather than on a chronological account of the history of cinema.
