Subject objectives	The aim of the course is to provide students with knowledge of the theory, history, and contemporary significance of performing arts festivals. Students will gain an understanding of current approaches to reflecting on the role of festivals from the perspective of various humanities disciplines. They will also learn about the impact of festivals on local development as well as on the artistic growth of performing arts organizations. The course also focuses on analyzing fundraising and management processes, enabling students to acquire practical skills in planning, fundraising, and marketing. Students will learn the fundamental principles of collaborating with artists and creators.
